I joined the financial services industry simply because I find extreme pleasure in serving and educating others on a topic that has a thousand shades of grey, “financial planning”. There are so many financial decisions that people endure throughout their lives, and many aren’t made “with the end in mind”

My focus, and what I believe sets me apart, is educating others on not just reaching their short-term goals but putting things into perspective for them years down the line, so that they have much more flexibility when that time comes. Saving for retirement is one thing. Figuring out the most efficient way to provide yourself an income in retirement with the market, taxes, and overall economy is something completely different and usually not accounted for. There is no greater joy than seeing someone benefit from the financial education you provided them now and years down the road.
